

Huntington Learning Center Leader Named “Power Woman” By New York Moves

Vice President Anne Huntington Awarded Top Honor at November Gala

November 9, 2018 - Oradell, NJ - Anne Huntington, Vice President of Huntington Learning Center has been named a “Moves Power Woman” by New York Moves the NYC-based lifestyle magazine. Huntington joins an elite group of 24 women from around the country who are making a difference by advocating for women’s rights, social fairness and equal opportunity in their respective industries. Previous honorees include media mogul Arianna Huffington, Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz, journalists Hoda Kotb and Norah O’Donnell and other trailblazers.

“I am proud to be a woman in business during a time when more and more strides are being made to push all groups of people forward,” said Huntington. “It is an honor to stand with the other Power Women to reflect on the work that has been done and motivate us to continue to make a difference.”

Anne joined Huntington Learning Center in 2014 as Head of Strategic Partnerships and transitioned to Vice President of Business Development in 2017. In this role, she develops and executes internal and external programs and partnerships for the nation’s leading tutoring and test prep provider with more than 300 locations nationwide.

“Anne is a change maker and we are so proud to have her on our team,” said Eileen Huntington, Co-Founder and CEO of Huntington Learning Center. “As the active second generation Huntington to join the family business, she is ushering in a new phase for the company and her leadership could not be more aligned with the Power Woman mission.”

Hosted by actresses Michelle Rodriguez and Patricia Clarkson and emceed by CNN’s Poppy Harlow, the “2018 Moves Power Gala” highlighted the work of female leaders from many prestigious companies including Aflac, Capital One, Barnes & Noble, Whole Foods, Eileen Fisher, Discovery, HGTV, The Food Network and MasterCard.